About the Course:

The course would introduce students to major theoretical debates on globalisation and the state to inculcate a critical understanding of the subject. The debate over historicity of globalisation, its socio-cultural, economic and political ramifications would form an important component of the course. The course would also introduce main theoretical formulations on the nature and formation of the modern nation-state and the idea and practice of sovereignty that has been the principal edifice of contemporary international politics. Organised under five broad sub themes – Debating Globalisation; Approaches and Theories; Conceptual Anchors: State and Sovereignty; 'Transformation' of State and Sovereignty; Culture, Identity and Resistance, the course would offer students an analytical and theoretical insights into the myriad dimensions of contemporary forms of globalisation and its encounters with state and sovereignty.

Course Evaluation:
