Course Objectives

This course aims to explain the democratic journey of United States of America. The various themes under discussion focus on composing a compelling narrative of various socio-political occurrences since the foundation of the union. The course sets out the national story, emphasizing distinctive features of the national experience, which are meant to drive home an understanding of national values. The course structure contrasts paradigms of knowledge from traditional and modern perspective on the evolution of the US history. The curriculum contextualises the development of political and social belief structures that impacted the overall trajectory of the American politics and history.

Learning Outcomes

Gaining an extensive evidential base for the contemplation and analysis of how the US accomplished its journey as a democratic power, to comprehend the factors that cause change; and through history understand what elements of an institution or a society persist despite change. The course builds the ability to assess evidence and provides experience in dealing with and assessing various kinds of archival and historical evidence. Learning how to combine different kinds of evidence—public statements, private records, numerical data, visual materials—develops the ability to make coherent arguments based on a variety of data. The ability to assess conflicting Interpretations is gained by sorting through diverse, often conflicting interpretations of how societies and their politics work. It expands skills to assess past examples of change which are vital to understanding contemporary United States.
